Southern Tasmania (Around Hobart)

Southern Tasmania, centred on Hobart, offers backpackers a rich combination of waterfront culture, colonial heritage villages, forest valleys, and island adventures. The area blends urban comfort with easy access to nature, allowing travellers to enjoy both the vibrant city scene and peaceful rural escapes within short driving distances.

Accommodation options in this region range from lively city hostels and boutique inns to rural cottages, lodges, and powered holiday parks. Travellers can also choose free bush camps and national park campgrounds located near major attractions. The southern region's main visitor areas include Hobart Waterfront and Salamanca Place, the MONA precinct in Glenorchy and Austins Ferry, Richmond Village, Bruny Island, the Huon Valley and Tahune Airwalk, and Hastings Caves with its thermal springs.

Backpackers can easily explore these areas by renting vehicles from Hobart city or airport depots. Food choices are plentiful, from fine dining along the Hobart waterfront to cozy cafés in Richmond and seaside pubs on Bruny Island. Southern Tasmania is also known for its farm-to-table cuisine, fresh seafood, and locally sourced produce.

Hobart Waterfront and Salamanca Place

Hobart, Tasmania's capital city, is the most popular base for travellers exploring the southern region. The Hobart Waterfront and Salamanca Place are well known for their artistic culture, weekend markets, and heritage sandstone buildings that line the streets. The district offers easy access to the MONA ferry terminal, Mount Wellington hiking trails, and the city's pubs, galleries, and cafés.

Offshore Islands of Tasmania (Bruny, King & Flinders Islands)

Tasmania's offshore islands each offer a distinct atmosphere — Bruny Island with its gourmet produce and coastal walks, King Island with its surf and dairy fame, and Flinders Island with its rugged granite peaks and turquoise coves. These islands combine peaceful seclusion with genuine Tasmanian hospitality. Travellers can expect wild beaches, wildlife sanctuaries, and welcoming communities, making them ideal for backpackers, couples, and road-trippers seeking immersive island experiences.
